

Call for Papers

Inaugural Issue of The Phoenician: The Delta Phi Epsilon Journal of Foreign Affairs

The Delta Phi Epsilon Foreign Affairs Council (DPE-FAC) invites submissions for the first issue of The Phoenician, a bi-annual peer-reviewed publication dedicated to highlighting issues in foreign affairs from the diverse perspectives of experienced practitioners, expert academics, and young observers. The Phoenician is open to submissions through May 30th, 2018 for this first issue.

In order to demonstrate the breadth of expertise the Delta Phi Epsilon/foreign affairs community has, the first issue of The Phoenician will not be themed. However, we especially welcome contributions that echo the values of the Delta Phi Epsilon Foreign Affairs Council, including promoting fellowship among persons studying or engaged in international affairs, advancing democratic governance, rule of law and international peace; and promoting the ethical practice of foreign affairs and commerce. We welcome a number of submission formats in order to allow for a diverse representation of writing styles:

RESEARCH PAPERS: We invite contributors to submit international political or policy-relevant research papers. Submissions should be timely and include a clearly defined methodology, substantive analysis and appropriate citations. Papers must also make a strong argument in an academic format (Chicago citation-style). Submissions should be no longer than 8,000 words.

ARTICLES: We invite contributors to submit policy-oriented pieces which analyze timely and important issues while also providing relevant policy recommendations. Articles should be no longer than 4,000 words.

COMMENTS: We invite contributors to submit narrative or descriptive opinion pieces that highlight recent events or issues in the foreign affairs space. Comment submissions should be no longer than 2,500 words.

We accept submissions from alumni and current undergraduate members of Delta Phi Epsilon, as well as outside contributions.

The Phoenician provides an accessible platform for foreign affairs-oriented essays from the academic community, practitioners in government, think tanks, non-profits, the business community, and from advanced undergraduate and graduate students. The journal engages with best practices in a variety of publication disciplines, coupling an academic-style peer-review process with policy-relevant, shorter-form content written for a larger audience of foreign affairs professionals. The journal targets academics interested in influencing the policy community, mid- and early-career professionals seeking an outlet for their ideas and expertise, and worthy students looking to spread new and novel understandings of the world.

Please direct all submissions and inquiries to our Managing Editor, Julian Waller, jwaller@dpeforeignaffairs.org.
